3. VISUAL MAP.

I have been impressed with visual maps of project areas which I have seen in quite a number of projects I have visited in the country during recent months. A visual map of the Block indicating existing facilities and those that are planned to be established under the National Extension Service or the Community Development Programme, helps, as no other medium, to keep the project staff constantly rivetted to the targets as also to an over-all picture of the block which normally gets lost in the rush of isolated efforts. A map such as this can also become a significant centre of attraction and education for village folks who can see the programme in action on a front wider than their own village.

As a logical corollary you will find that this system is bound to travel down the line up to the village level where the Village Panchayat would like to have a map in the Panchayat Ghar, indicating the same features as are included in the Block map. I would strongly commend this for your consideration.
